125th Anniversary Tidbit

Tom & Charlene Esch dining with rice and water

Hunger Banquet 2007

Guests drew tickets at random that assigned them to either a high, middle, or low-income tier and received a corresponding meal. The 15% in the high income tier were served a sumptuous meal. The 35% in the middle income section eat a simple meal of rice and beans. The 45% in the low income tier helped themselves to small portions of rice and water and eaten without utensils. Guests also assumed characterization that described the situation of a specific person at the income level to which they've been assigned. Everyone left with a greater sense of the needs of others and thankfulness for what they have.
